Secondary suite safety 'just terrible'

Pilot project. Windows, smoke alarms among some of the concerns

Half of the secondary suites city officials investigated during a year-long pilot project had "significant safety issues," according to initial results going before aldermen this week.

Smoke alarms that weren't connected with the rest of the home, improper windows — or in some cases no windows at all — and limited drywalling on the ceiling and around the furnace room were chief concerns as the City of Calgary approached owners of 50 homes believed to feature secondary suites.

The results of the pilot, which aimed to raise awareness and give city council a keener understanding of safety issues, stunned Russ Mantei, whose daughter Colleen Mantei and two others died in a northwest Calgary basement-suite fire in 2009.

The unit's lone smoke detector wasn't working at the time and evidence found in the home indicates the victims tried unsuccessfully to pry safety bars off a window in an attempt to escape.

"Life just hasn't been the same since," Russ said Sunday, before adding the findings of the city's pilot project, "are just terrible ... People need to start treating these suites like they would if it was their own kids living in them."

After being approached by the city, 23 homeowners opted to decommission their suites rather than work to bring them up to code.

The numbers were also disappointing to Ald. Brian Pincott, who, along with Mayor Naheed Nenshi and a host of other aldermen, pushed to relax suite zoning rules in 2011, but many of the changes were narrowly defeated.

The thinking at the time was that by allowing secondary suites in all areas of the city and reducing red-tape, homeowners would be more likely to follow proper channels including ensuring property safety.

With the current setup, Pincott said, suite tenants have "zero rights."

"They complain to the landlord, they're out, they complain to the city, they're out, because the city will shut it down," he said.

Ald. Andre Chabot still believes neighbours should have a right to weigh in on a proposed suite that could impact their community rather than allowing blanket approval.

'Very last resort'

School board has agency extracting debt from parents

Calgary's public school board has recouped more than $350,000 in outstanding fees from parents for the 2011-12 year by using a collection agency.

But two-thirds of $1.1 million in unpaid charges for instructional supplies, busing and noon-hour supervision remained unaccounted for as of May 31, and some parents say they are unfazed by pressure from the agency.

The total amount outstanding in 2011-12 was the highest in recent years. However, it comes before a move to separate busing and noon-hour fees, which drove the cost up for some parents by $80 per student for 2012-13. That charge will rise to $145 per child this fall.

"It's not even that much money — to me it's the principle," said Dawn Ackroyd, mother of two, who is anticipating a letter from the collection agency after she declined to pay their noon-hour fees for the current year.

"I never signed a contract for that," she said, when asked why she opted not to pay.

The CBE, however, has maintained that sending unpaid fees to a collection agency is a "very last resort" and is the best way to ensure fairness for parents who do fork over the money.

Spokesperson Megan Geyer said that while only one-third of the fees owed have been collected, other parents could still be in the process of working with the collection agency.

Cerebral palsy can't stop this U of C PhD

Aspiring engineer. The focus of his study: Heating systems of hot baths in ancient Rome

JEREMY NOLAIS
jeremy.nolais@metronews.ca

Even crossing the stage on his graduation day, Taylor Oetelaar will be up against the odds.

"We collectively, as his family, are going to hold our breath and say, 'Please don't fall, please don't fall,'" said his mother, Joy Oetelaar.

Taylor has dealt with severe cerebral palsy for his entire life. It greatly impacts his mobility and speech, but his mother said physicians have marvelled at how his mind stayed sharp.

He completed his PhD in mechanical engineering this spring at the University of Calgary, focusing on the heating of hot baths used in ancient Rome.

The limited dexterity in his hands forced the 28-year-old to type out his entire 341-page dissertation using just two fingers.

Taylor concedes his cerebral palsy affects everything he does. But he credited his parents with promoting a "never-quit attitude."

Family's praise

"My husband and I don't know how he has the stamina to do all these things. We are tremendously proud."

Joy Oetelaar, mother of 28-year-old Taylor

On Monday afternoon, Taylor will turn the page after spending more than 10 years at U of C pursuing his goals.

He worked on the institution's famed solar-car team, served for years as a teaching assistant and even spent three weeks studying in Rome.

"Being in the 'Eternal City' was a surreal experience," Taylor wrote in an email interview.

Now, the aspiring engineer faces his toughest question yet: What to do next?

"At the moment I am wavering between venturing out into industry and continuing with a post-doctoral fellowship.... My ideal job would be to work for one of the design think-tanks, where clients have a problem (and) the company designs a solution," he said.

Moose on loose tranquilized after trek through town

Police, firefighters and fish and wildlife officers spent hours chasing a moose around Calgary on Sunday.

Calls began coming in around noon about the animal, spotted on Stoney Trail near Country Hills Boulevard, according to police.

"(Alberta Fish and Wildlife officers) darted it, and it was transported to Bragg Creek," Const. Tat Ng said Sunday evening.

It was not believed the animal was harmed during its trek through town.

Random attack?

Apparent stabbing victim remains in serious condition

Friends rushed a man to hospital early Sunday in what police believe was an unprovoked stabbing.

Police were called to the 2200 block of Woodview Drive S.W. around 2:45 a.m. as reports of a stabbing came in.

But when officers arrived the victim was gone — he'd already been rushed to Rockyview General Hospital.

Police said the victim underwent surgery and remained in serious condition. The incident appears to have been random. Police continue to investigate.

Driver suffers life-threatening injuries in rollover

Speed and alcohol are believed to be factors in a vehicle rollover in Calgary's northeast early Sunday.

Shortly before 12:30 a.m., emergency crews responded to reports a Toyota Camry had rolled along Stoney Trail near 96th Avenue N.E.

Upon arrival, they found a 21-year-old man had been ejected from the vehicle as it rolled. He was rushed to hospital with life-threatening head and internal injuries.

Walking for a cure. Participants aim to raise $8 million in donations and pledges

ALLISON PARDER

Thousands of happy faces filled Stanley Park on Sunday to find a cure for a disease that doesn't normally lend itself to smiles.

Participants at the 2013 Telus Walk to Cure Diabetes raised the bar this year by aiming for $8 million total in donations and pledges. With more than 45,000 walkers across Canada, there's a great deal of confidence that goal can be met.

"(This) is a really supportive community," said John Trebilcock, walking for his second time in Calgary. "We're here to support my 12-year-old son Alexander, who was diagnosed (with Type 1 diabetes) four years ago."

Along with the bouncy house and face-painting station, there was also an opportunity to learn about new technologies.

"It's a chance to see newer, smaller, more accurate blood sensors and diabetes pumps — stuff that makes your life easier," said Trebilcock.

The Moore family gathered in support of eight-year-old Mackenzie Moore. "We've got family everywhere, even great grandparents that have come down," said Mackenzie's grandmother, Diane Moore.

Type 1 diabetes

More than 300,000 Canadians have been diagnosed with Type 1 diabetes. Unlike Type 2 diabetes, it cannot be prevented by diet, exercise or medication.

Verizon story source outed at his own request

The Guardian. Ex CIA employee Edward Snowden, 29, said his motive was to 'inform the public'; NSA seeks criminal investigation

A former CIA employee and National Security Agency contractor is the source of The Guardian's disclosures about the U.S. government's secret surveillance programs, the British newspaper reported Sunday.

The leaks have reopened a debate about privacy concerns versus heightened measures to protect against terrorist attacks, and led America's NSA to ask for a criminal investigation.

The Guardian said it was publishing the identity of Edward Snowden, 29, a former technical assistant for the CIA and current employee of defence contractor Booz Allen Hamilton, at his own request.

"My sole motive is to inform the public as to that which is done in their name and that which is done against them," said Snowden.

The NSA has been collecting the phone records of hundreds of millions of Americans. President Barack Obama has said the programs have been authorized by Congress and are subject to supervision. "What I can say is that in evaluating these programs, they make a difference in our capacity to anticipate and prevent possible terrorist activity."

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

His background

Edward Snowden said that he lacked a high school diploma and enlisted in the U.S. Army.

- After leaving the army, he got his foot in the door with the NSA working at a covert facility.
- He then worked for the CIA in information technology. By 2007, he was stationed in Geneva.

Journalism. U.S. state snooping prompts debate on source protection

A scandal over state snooping on journalists in the United States is prompting media-watchers to consider new techniques to protect sources.

Anonymity of sources is considered sacrosanct among journalists and essential to their safety, reputation, and ability to act as public whistle-blowers.

But journalists are lagging behind when it comes to protecting sources in the digital era, critics say.

"There is a general lack of awareness (among journalists) about what ubiquitous surveillance looks like," said Jonathan Stray, who teaches at Columbia University. Everything from the websites you visit, the calls you make, and even your phone location are logged somewhere, Stray said. The same applies to reporters. Whistle-blowers are at particular risk. A week ago, The New Yorker unveiled Strongbox — a secure way for people to leak information to them.

Defence survey to shed light on silent crime

Results of an anonymous survey to be released in the fall by National Defence will shed more light on the extent of military sexual assault, including what has been called the silent crime of male-on-male rape.

Almost 68,000 troops, 86 per cent of them men, were asked last year to voluntarily complete the Canadian Forces Workplace Harassment Survey. It asks their gender, years of service and rank, along with 100 questions ranging from personal harassment to whether they've been raped. It's the first such survey since 1998. Results could provide valuable insight into the extent of sexual violence in the Canadian military — an issue that former soldiers and others say is rarely reported. The extent to which men are sexually assaulted by other men is even more cloaked in silence, they say.

South Africa prays for 'father of nation'

Nelson Mandela. Anti-apartheid leader battles grave infection; in serious condition

Former South African president Nelson Mandela's granddaughter Ndileka Mandela, left, and daughter Makaziwe Mandela leave the Mediclinic Herat Hospital in Pretoria on Sunday. GETTY IMAGES

Nelson Mandela received visits from family members on Sunday at a hospital where the former president and anti-apartheid leader was being treated for a recurring lung infection, while South Africans expressed their appreciation for a man widely regarded as the father of the nation.

There was no official update on 94-year-old Mandela after his second night in the hospital. His condition was described as "serious but stable" on Saturday.

The office of President Jacob Zuma had said that Mandela was taken to a Pretoria hospital after his condition deteriorated at around 1:30 a.m. on Saturday.

The anti-apartheid leader has now been taken to a hospital four times since December, with the last discharge coming on April 6 after doctors diagnosed him with pneumonia and drained fluid from his lung area.

Mandela was freed in 1990 after 27 years as a prisoner of white racist rule and won election to the presidency in all-race elections in 1994. He retired from public life years ago and had received medical care at his Johannesburg home until his latest transfer to a hospital. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Canada celebrates decade of same-sex marriage

Ten years ago, their unprecedented wedding stood for hope, equality and inclusion.

A decade later, Michael Leshner and Michael Stark — Canada's first legally married same-sex couple — believe the battle to have their union recognized by the courts has made it easier for today's lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender Canadians to feel accepted.

"Once you have marriage you have full equality. That was won that day," said Leshner.

The pair's quick civil ceremony in Toronto came just hours after Ontario's Court of Appeal pronounced the Canadian law on traditional marriage unconstitutional on June 10, 2003.

While Ontario was the first to legally recognize same-sex marriage, many other provinces followed soon after. Two years later, the federal government legalized same-sex marriage countrywide with the gender-neutral Civil Marriage Act. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Turkish PM's taunts bring more protesters to streets

After the speech. Tens of thousands pack into Taksim Square; thousands more flood Ankara's central square

In a series of increasingly belligerent speeches to cheering supporters Sunday, Turkey's prime minister launched a verbal attack on the tens of thousands of anti-government protesters who flooded the streets for a 10th day, accusing them of creating an environment of terror.

Recep Tayyip Erdogan made the most inflammatory of his speeches as he arrived in the capital, Ankara. Erdogan belittled the protesters, again calling them "capulcu," the Turkish word for looters or vandals. He made his speech in Ankara on an open-top bus, which then drove into the city in a motorcade.

Anti-government protesters have turned Erdogan's label of them as "capulcu" into mocking slogans, printing stickers with the word, scrawling it on their tents and uploading music videos onto social network sites.

COWTOWN'S NEVER TASTED BETTER

High Plains Drifter

James Callsen
calgary@metronews.ca

I'm an unabashed lover of our city.

Very rarely will you find me not waving the flag or cheerleading for Calgary on some level or another. Outside of complaining about traffic issues and the ignorant, I've really enjoyed using this space to toot Cowtown's horn on one subject or another.

As a transplant to this city, I'm continually enjoying its evolution. Whether it be politically, on environmental issues or when it comes to arts and culture, every day I spend in this city, it feels like we're going somewhere.

The latest ever-evolving trend I'm watching in Calgary is the food and drink business.

Now, I've never worked in hospitality, but I find the business fascinating. Where in the past, eating seemed to be all about a wide variety, value and bang for the buck, it feels as if Calgary has jumped on the small and local bandwagon and I'm absolutely loving it.

In a conversation with a friend the other day, we both pointed out how much more fun it is to go out for a bite and a few cocktails with so many new options on the table.

When I moved here almost 10 years ago, the idea of being able to choose between Neapolitan pizza, Mexican-hybrid cuisine, southern barbecue or local, organic charcuterie seemed about as realistic as Jarome Iginla never winning a cup with the Flames (ah, the halcyon days of 2004).

However, now, if I wanted to eat or drink somewhere new, the options seem endless.

I guess, in a lot of ways, Calgary is playing catch-up, but I have to tip my white Stetson to those willing to take a risk on something new and to also make a point of serving up quality food made from real, decent ingredients and serving it alongside a cocktail that isn't made with cola or a beer that isn't plastered all over billboards in your local sporting arena.

I openly applaud a joint that makes local a priority and takes pride in serving entrees that weren't frozen an hour before.

That willingness to go against the grain is true to this city's spirit as haven for mavericks, and I can't wait to see what the next evolution will be.

Considering the incredible agricultural producers surrounding Calgary, it seems odd that eating local is suddenly all the rage.

Shouldn't this have been the case all along?

Either way, as a consumer and amateur foodie, I love that my city's food and drink scene is one more thing I can be proud of.

Feeding Alberta. Charities banking on collaboration as the way of the future

News worth sharing

Media will always have to report on the tough stuff. But we know that Canada is full of compassionate people, inspiring projects and stories worth celebrating. Here's just one:

Running a food bank is a tough job. Racing against expiration dates and providing not only enough food, but also enough varieties of food to meet basic nutritional needs are just some of the challenges.

It's a breathtaking balancing act, especially for grassroots groups that are often understaffed or unfunded.

"Sometimes food banks, depending on their location in the province, feel as though they are operating in isolation," says Jessi Evanoff, co-ordinator of the Alberta Food Bank Network Association (AFBNA), which recently held a conference in Camrose.

Facing budget cuts and increasing demand, 27 Alberta member banks, including Calgary Interfaith Food Bank, gathered below the white steeple of Bethel Evangelical Lutheran Church to lend each other moral support and to talk shop. "

Collaboration is the future for food banks," says Evanoff, who believes that community partnerships will help AFBNA members weather the economic rough patch and allow them to offer more holistic services.

Find out how you can help your community bank at afbna.ca.

iRadio music service, iOS update expected at Apple conference

San Francisco. New look for iPhones, iPads could be most radical design change to mobile software since 2007

Apple is expected to reveal a digital radio service and changes to the software behind iPhones and iPads on Monday as the company opens its annual conference for software developers.

Apple hasn't said what it will unveil at the Worldwide Developers Conference in San Francisco. But the major announcements are expected during Monday's keynote presentation. Last year, Apple used the conference to announce its own mapping service, better integration with social networks and improvements to virtual assistant Siri. It also announced thinner MacBooks with high-resolution screens. The conference runs through Friday.

This year, Apple is expected to show off a simplified look on iPhones and iPads. If the speculation is correct, it would be the most radical design change since the iPhone made its debut in 2007, showing consumers that phones could do much more than make calls and exchange messages.

This week's event comes at an important time for Apple. The company's stock price has fallen amid concerns that another breakthrough product isn't imminent. Although CEO Tim Cook has said people shouldn't expect new products until the fall, Apple is likely to preview how future products will function in its unveiling of new services and features.

Monday's highlight is expected to be an updated version of iOS, the software that runs iPhones, iPads and iPod Touches. It will be called iOS 7 and will come with new devices expected to go on sale this fall. Owners of recent models such as last fall's iPhone 5 will likely be eligible for free upgrades.

- Observers think Apple will debut a music-streaming service dubbed iRadio, and that it will be most similar to Pandora, an advertising-supported service that plays songs at random within certain genres for free.
- However, the Apple service is expected to feature a seamless way for listeners to purchase songs through iTunes.

Federal agency stops investigating deadly anthrax

Canada's food regulator is no longer getting involved in cases of anthrax, a disease that can kill cattle, bison, other grazing animals and, in rare cases, people.

The Canadian Food Inspection Agency says it will no longer investigate and quarantine anthrax-infected farms, collect samples for testing, vaccinate livestock or oversee and help pay for the cost of disposing animals that die of the disease.

New rules that went into effect this spring say livestock producers, with the help of private veterinarians, are expected to take responsibility for preventing and dealing with anthrax.

Anthrax is caused by naturally occurring bacteria in spores in soil. The spores can become active during hot weather that follows heavy rains or flooding. Animals that ingest the spores can get sick and die very quickly. THE CANADIAN PRESS

George Stroumboulopoulos' new CNN talk show premiered Sunday night. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Strombo brings style to CNN

Network sea change.
New mandate and management has the purveyor of American news looking to branch out into new territory

It's a safe bet that George Stroumboulopoulos will be the first male CNN personality to wear two earrings and a skull ring from a designer who made one for Keith Richards.

Stroumboulopoulos, whose new nighttime talk show premiered Sunday, is more curious than dangerous, though.

The show gets a solid time slot for its debut, airing after the season finale of Anthony Bourdain's successful Parts Unknown. Then it will settle into a regular spot on Fridays at 11 p.m. Eastern for the summer and, if things go well, maybe beyond.

This is part of CNN's attempt to branch out beyond news programming at certain times, represented most prominently by Bourdain's show. The effort started before the arrival of new network boss Jeff Zucker — Stroumboulopoulos had his first contact with the network last summer before Zucker arrived — but the enthusiasm continued with the change in management.

Stroumboulopoulos already hosts a nightly talk show on the CBC, where his friendly style seems to encourage celebrities to open up.

"I hope that people pick up something new about the person I'm interviewing and find out a way to relate to them," he said. "I want them to find a connection."

For CNN, the show represents an old style for a new generation. Stroumboulopoulos, 40, said his interest in politics was fuelled less by politicians than by listening to the Clash and Public Enemy. He's eager to interview Snoop Lion, the former Snoop Dogg, on his show because he considers him such an important figure in hip-hop.

Rap artist Wiz Khalifa, comic Martin Short and actor Keanu Reeves were the guests on his first show.

Other confirmed interviews for the show's 10-week run include Betty White, Bill Maher, Sharon Stone and filmmaker Werner Herzog.

The show will tape before a studio audience in Los Angeles. Stroumboulopoulos said he's not gunning for the job of CNN's other general interview program, Piers Morgan, and said he likes the way Morgan conducts interviews.

For the moment, he'll fit the CNN show in with a schedule that includes the CBC show (which airs twice in the evening) and a weekly music and talk program he does for a CBS radio station.

"This is what I do," he said. "I don't even have any dependents in my life. I don't even have a plant."

What's in a name? A lot of money, apparently

Scarlett Johansson is suing over the use of her name in The First Thing We Look At, a French novel by Gregoire Delacourt, according to the Hollywood Reporter.

The book features a character first believed to be Johansson until it is later revealed she is a look-alike.

Johansson is seeking compensation and damages for "breach and fraudulent use of personal rights," and she's also seeking a ban on "future transfer of rights and adaptations of the book."

Delacourt, for his part, is "stunned" by the suit and says he chose Johansson for the story because she is the "epitome of beauty today."

Let's go ride a bike

Welcome your kids to the wheel world

YummyMummyClub.ca CEO and avid Cadbury Bicycle Factory supporter Erica Ehm speaks to the unexpected education one can acquire on a bicycle.

What can young ones learn from getting on a bicycle for the first time this summer?
The first bike ride is a real bonding moment between parent and child. It's really their first big opportunity for independence. It's a very special moment. It can be tough for them at first — but it teaches persistence and fitness. It's a very important message to instill in your kids, that it's important to go out and play. METRO

In Africa, bicycles have a profound impact on students' lives. A bike can cut travel time to school by up to four hours a day.

- The Cadbury Bicycle Factory is an initiative that has built more than 18,000 bicycles to help students in Africa get to school every day.
- By playing a free online game, kids can prompt Cadbury to continue to donate the individual parts that will make up a full bicycle for a student in need.

New study. Our expert weighs in on a report claiming moms who work outside the home enjoy better mental and physical health

IT'S ALL RELATIVE
Kathy Buckworth, kathybuckworth.com

Women who have kids and work full time have been found to have better mental and physical health by 40. ISTOCK

A recent survey found women who worked full time outside the home after having children had better mental and physical health by age 40 than those who had not.

This has of course raised interest, as one might assume that working full time while managing a family would be more stressful, and stress is a known factor in contributing to mental and physical challenges.

It would appear that this isn't necessarily accurate. Why would this be?

Personally, I'm not entirely surprised by the findings. I think Albert Einstein had stay-at-home moms in mind when he defined the word "insanity" as "doing the same thing over and over again and expecting different results."

Have you ever been at home with young children? Have you tried to get them to clean up their rooms, pee into the toilet or stop hitting their sister?

No matter how many times they are told (clearly it is not "nagging" when it is simply giving them excellent advice), the outcome is often the same.

Nothing changes. At least not immediately, and not without years of bribing and threats.

Add to that the fact that my research (I drove around a bit) shows that there isn't a big list moms can carpool to at the end of the day in order to check off: a) continued successfully raising child, b) ensured food was edible and in good portion size and c) minimum health standards were met.

Many moms at home just don't get to feel that sense of accomplishment that comes with actually moving something forward and affecting change. Not in the short term, at any rate, and one of the most distressing things a parent of young children can hear from parents of older children is that it "never gets easy."

There's no such thing as a performance review when you're on the home front: except for the ones you get from snarly teenage girls who aren't necessarily focusing on your positive attributes, as the ones in a professional work environment might. Unless, "You suck" is now a good thing in the way that "that's so sick" has become. (I do try.)

The reward system for moms at home also leaves something to be desired. In that there really isn't one, except for the playground high fives you exchange with a friend when your kid wasn't the one kicking someone else off the slide.

Compare this to the workplace, where most employees can expect to be treated with a modicum of respect, have performance reviews which don't include door slamming (to be fair, there aren't any doors in most cubicles), and best of all, they get to take on new responsibilities with the positive achievement of old ones.

Being relieved at duties you've perfected is something moms at home never get to experience. Until the kids are the ones to leave home, that is.

Kicking it off once the cap comes off

The parties, the pictures, and now, a profession? How to get your game face on after graduation

For post-secondary graduates receiving degrees and diplomas in the weeks ahead, excitement over completing their programs may be tempered by the grim job landscape for Canada's young people.

The latest labour force survey from Statistics Canada revealed a decline of 19,000 jobs for youth aged 15 to 24 in April. The youth unemployment rate was at 14.5 per cent last month, little changed compared to a year earlier and more than double the national average. "When you see numbers like that, it can often give you the impression there really aren't many jobs available in your area," said Shirin Khamisa, a Toronto-based career counsellor and founder of Careers by Design.

"Be very realistic and realize there is a general climate where there are less jobs, but that doesn't mean you won't be able to secure a job that's right for you."

Khamisa and other experts share two ways for job-seeking grads to distinguish themselves in a competitive job market and work toward kick-starting their careers.

Build a network

Do you have any professional contacts in your area of study or field of expertise? If not, there's no time like the present to start making connections. Attending industry events, joining a professional umbrella organization or engaging with individuals working in the field to ask about key needs in their area — and how you can fill them — could help build your network, said Khamisa.

"That's the really powerful thing in a job search when it's a tighter market — to get that face time with people who are in the field you'd like to work in."

Another good way to obtain information and build a network is through informal interviews, said Bruno Castilloux, manager of career services at the University of Ottawa.

He suggested researching the company of interest to craft precise questions before calling to speak briefly with a representative to learn more.

Graduating can be exciting ... and a little nerve-racking. Looking for job leads? Try networking with industry professionals. ISTOCK

Don't give up!

"Be very realistic and realize there is a general climate where there are less jobs, but that doesn't mean you won't be able to secure a job that's right for you."

Shirin Khamisa
Career counsellor

Keep connected

While many people will be keen to "jump right into job-search mode," Khamisa said that's not the best way to start a relationship with a potential contact. Khamisa said the job search should be a time of exploration. It's often easier when individuals are initially seeking out information and learning about a particular industry and the needs of an organization before hunting for a specific position, she noted. "Reaching out and connecting takes courage ... and I guarantee you there will be times where people don't get back to you or are just too busy or aren't receptive," she said.

"But the magic happens when you persevere and you keep going. And eventually, you will connect with a group of people who will help you and support you as you move forward." Khamisa added she once had a client who developed 10 contacts through cold calling. She continued to keep in touch over several months and ended up getting three different job offers. Placing a phone call isn't just limited to maintaining professional contacts.

When individuals reach the stage where they're submitting applications, a follow-up call is another way to show initiative, said Danielle Bragge, a partner with The Headhunters, a Canadian recruitment firm. It doesn't have to be aggressive. The process can be as simple as an introduction, mentioning your interest in the opportunity you've applied for and highlighting three quick reasons you'd make a great addition to the team, Bragge said.

Back with a blowout, and no, the Miami Heat didn't need LeBron James to do more.

Not when Mario Chalmers and everyone else did everything right.

Chalmers led the charge, James broke out to finish it with a flurry and the Heat used a 33-5 run to blow away the San Antonio Spurs 103-84 on Sunday night to even the NBA Finals at one game apiece.

James missed 10 of his first 13 shots and the Heat trailed by a point late in the third quarter before unleashing the lethal brand of basketball that led them to a franchise-record 66 wins this season.

Chalmers finished with 19 points, and James had 17 points, eight rebounds and seven assists while shooting only 7-for-17 from the field.

"I know my shooters only need a little bit of room to get the shot off," James said. "For me, I struggled offensively, but the shooters made some good shots."

The Heat made 10 of 19 3-pointers and got 13 points from Ray Allen, and 12 points and 10 rebounds from the previously slumping Chris Bosh.

Danny Green made all six shots, including five 3-pointers, and scored 17 points for the Spurs. They host Game 3 on Tuesday night.

Tony Parker had 13 points on 5-for-14 shooting for the Spurs, who were so precise in their 92-88 victory in Game 1 but threw the ball all over the white-surrounded court Sunday, committing 17 turnovers that led to 19 Miami points.

Tim Duncan made just three of 13 shot attempts and finished with nine points and 11 rebounds.

The Spurs had only four turnovers in Game 1, tying an NBA Finals record low. But they surpassed that total in the first quarter, Parker committing two of their five.

MLB. Rangers salvage finale as Toronto slugger loses his cool in last at-bat

The Texas Rangers used the long ball to get in position for a comeback win on Sunday.

A lack of focus from Toronto slugger Jose Bautista in a big ninth-inning situation helped them seal the victory.

Nelson Cruz, David Murphy and Adrian Beltre homered as the Rangers scored six unanswered runs in a 6-4 victory over the Blue Jays at Rogers Centre. Texas (37-25) salvaged the finale of the three-game series and ended Toronto's three-game winning streak.

Jose Bautista trades words with umpire Gary Darling.
TARA WALTON/TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

The Blue Jays (27-35) had the potential winning run at second base with one out in the ninth and Bautista at the plate.

The Toronto slugger didn't like a called strike by umpire Gary Darling and it appeared to rattle him for the rest of the at-bat. When Bautista struck out, he jawed with the umpire and was ejected from the game.

Bautista has never been shy in voicing displeasure with umpire calls. Manager John Gibbons said he's not concerned that his slugger might be getting a reputation.

"It doesn't help him, that's for sure," Gibbons said. "But it really hasn't been a problem this year. Today it kind of blew up but look over the season, it really hasn't been an issue. So we've just got to move on."

Bautista declined to speak with reporters after the game.

Horoscopes

♈ Aries
March 21 - April 20
Try to realize that not everyone thinks or feels the same way as you. A clash of viewpoints is likely today but it will only be a problem if you insist that you are right and others are wrong.

♉ Taurus
April 21 - May 21
You may prefer to stick with what you know and trust today rather than take a risk on something new. That's up to you, of course, but it's also a shame because a little bit of courage could change your life completely.

♊ Gemini
May 22 - June 21
Keep telling yourself that the changes now taking place are not nearly as bad as some people claim. As a matter of fact they could actually be beneficial, for you anyway, so make sure you have a positive attitude.

♋ Cancer
June 22 - July 23
You are not as conformist as some people think and what you do over the next few days will prove that fact several times over. Expect a bit of a backlash though.

♌ Leo
July 24 - Aug. 23
Try not to give too much away today, especially on the work front where knowledge is most definitely power. The less others know about what you are up to the more likely it is your efforts will be a success.

♍ Virgo
Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
For some reason you are a bit more aggressive than usual, which could lead to confrontations at home and at work.

♎ Libra
Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
It's time to get serious about your long-term aims and that means, inevitably, getting rid of certain short-term aims that eat up your time and your energy.

♏ Scorpio
Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
The planets will smooth your path as the new week begins and you will find it quite easy to get your way both in the professional sphere and in your private affairs.

♐ Sagittarius
Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
Try not to let little things annoy you today because if your temper gets the better of you there is no telling where it might lead. Whatever other people might say or do treat it all as a big joke.

♑ Capricorn
Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
If a commitment of some sort is not working out then maybe you should cut your losses and get out. It won't be easy but let common sense (and the contents of your wallet) guide you.

♒ Aquarius
Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
Some things can be put off indefinitely because they are not really important but you have been putting off something that MUST be forced through to a conclusion. Make this the week when you finally crack it.

♓ Pisces
Feb. 20 - March 20
Yes, all things are possible but don't get silly and change things for the sake of it today — chances are you will just have to change them back again later. SALLY BROMPTON
